

WADA Compliance Statement

At LifeWave, we prioritize product safety, integrity, and transparency.

- Our products have been reviewed by our team and have been found to not contain substances or methods currently listed on the WADA Prohibited List.
- In 2005, LifeWave received a letter from WADA confirming that our products did not violate the Prohibited List at that time. While WADA no longer provides such letters or reviews, we include this for historical context and to demonstrate our long-standing commitment to athlete safety.

Important Note:

WADA does not certify or endorse products and does not conduct reviews outside of official investigations. Athletes should always consult with their medical team and relevant anti-doping bodies before using any supplement or performance product.

We continuously monitor updates to the WADA list to ensure our ingredient reviews remain current.

Dear Dr Haltiwanger,

I would like to inform you that the WADA List Committee reviewed the information pertaining to the LifeWave patch technology. Based on the information reviewed, including the patch testing conducted by USADA, the Committee considers that this technology is not a method falling under the WADA List of Prohibited Substances and Methods.

This statement by no means constitutes a WADA endorsement of the LifeWave Technology. WADA continues to draw the attention of the athletes to their strict responsibility for everything they absorb or apply to their body. This in no way constitutes an authorization for LifeWave to advertise or indicate on its product or advertisement that this product is authorized by WADA.

I trust this information is helpful.

Yours sincerely,

Olivier Rabin.
